

September 2009

Dear parent or guardian,

South Kingstown High School has organized a Wednesday morning tutoring program as part of our continuing efforts to academically support students. This program, described in a recent automated phone message, is for freshman students who are struggling in one or more subject areas. The key components of this tutoring are organization, improvement of study habits, and academic success.

This program is open to all freshmen. Tutoring sessions will meet every Wednesday at 7:37 AM beginning October 7, 2009. The individuals tutoring your child are student volunteers from Salve Regina and The University of Rhode Island, as well as CARES mentors and National Honor Society students.

Participation in the tutoring program is voluntary, but our hope is that by attending these tutoring sessions, your child will gain enhanced organizational and study skills in order to improve grades. Teachers of ninth grade students have been informed of this program and are encouraged to remind their students to use this weekly tutoring session for test or quiz study, homework review, or to work on long-term assignments.

Should you have any questions, please contact Anahid Avedesian at 360-1007 or Barbara Crudale at 360-1014.

We look forward to your child's participation in the tutoring program. Thank you in advance for your support.

Sincerely,

Wednesday Morning Tutoring Committee
